

If you have a caring role, it is important to have access to information and support which can help you get through this challenging time. Here are some important questions answered.

What important things should I be doing?

- Let your GP know that you are a carer (if they don't already know.)
- If the person you care for needs medication, contact your GP to ensure repeat prescriptions and medication can still be collected. Check if your local pharmacy provide a prescription delivery service.
- Put an emergency plan in place should you become unwell yourself and unable to care, see below.
- Getting the right information. The Government and the NHS are keeping people informed of new advice and developments. Ensure you are keeping up to date.

How can I stay in contact with my loved one who is in a mental health inpatient unit or a community hospital?

Please check the current visiting situation with our hospitals or inpatient sites as this is being continuously reviewed and revised in order to protect our patients and staff who care for them from Coronavirus.

Other ways you can stay in contact with your loved one or friend through phone, email or social media (if possible). Wards are doing what they can to support inpatients who do not have their own technology to enable them to stay in touch with their loved ones.

If you have concerns about your loved one, please contact the ward directly and speak to a member of staff.

Letters to a Loved One Scheme
